What are some good ways?

cspanrules · 8mo ago

1. Cold Calling
2. Build your social media presence. Continue to post on a consistent schedule.
3. Door knocking
4. Flyer dropping
5. Sending mailers
6. Sphere of Influence (Friends, family, etc)
7. Open Houses

Just to name a few.

Door knock the neighborhood you want to work in, make sure you know the area inside and out. You need to spend a lot of time being the area expert as a new agent.

Host open houses for your office or more senior agents who have multiple listings on hand. I close several deals a year from open houses and unrepresented buyers.

People will say your sphere of influence but most of your peers will not trust you and instead will be silently judging you to see how well you do. Your family may help, but that will dry up quickly.

You can pay for lead generation companies or ads, but those cost thousands a month which you may not be in the position to afford when you're just starting out.

Use your social media (YouTube, Instagram, Tik tok) and leverage A.I. to generate content that adds value to the consumer. Free organic way to generate leads.

Good luck!

Paid ads on social media. Very inexpensive with a narrow target area (zip codes).
Also, useful and valualbe content on social media. Insider tips - that sort of thing.

Best way?!? YouTube. But it takes a long time, longer than you have. But once it's rolling you're good to go. Fastest way is open house and database.

YouTube is good if you can be good and engaging on camera. You can pair up Facebook ads with YouTube so that you can send engagement from Facebook over to YouTube and have those ads shown to people that are in your network on Facebook or from people that interacted with your Facebook ads. This also helps optimize YouTube ads faster to see better results.

Open houses are good if you treat them like an opt in funnel lol. Use the QR code method but don't tell people what the QR code is for. Let their curiosity get them to scan it and get onto a landing page built specifically for the open house and for them to learn everything about you.

Right, YouTube is good if one follows all the "rules." Like, be extra energetic, consistent, have a hook, know how to tell an engaging story, etc.

Ads is a separate skill. They also work well, but I would not mix it with an organic YouTube channel. FB and YT ads can have prospects "raise their hand" when offered a good lead magnet. Like, Free list of Unclaimed Homes under $$$K in YOUR CITY... Or something like that.

I agree with your open house strategy about using it as an opt in funnel. Similar to ads, use it to get people to give you their info on exchange for something like, unlisted homes, coming soon homes, $5000 off closing costs, etc. I like this because it's free advertising, except for the start up costs of signs, banners, balloons, etc.

Cold Calling

Yes but works best if you can call the leads that are exclusive to you and not given to you but generated for you by you.

Right but To save time focus ob closing, I prefer to make someone to handle this place and I focus on smth important It's a life rule : if you dont have time to do it then hire people who is better than you in this place. Trust me you will scale

Yes I agree 100%. Buy back your time. But need to have the SOPs and training dialled in. Otherwise you will be stuck with training.

Fb ads with directed traffic to a long-form sales letter.

1 · Award · Share

nycdude2022 · 8mo ago

Long form doesn't work as well anymore as it used to. CPL are higher and Opt-ins from longer form sales letters are lower. People simply don't have the attention span because their dopamine is cooked and we're living in a trust recession. Keep the least amount of friction and focus more on lead qualification.

Zillow and co work great.

Why feed Zillow with more info and feed their AI. Run your marketing and feed your Meta pixel.

So feed Facebook more info and feed their AI?

Facebook ads are kind of crap. Lead cost and quality aren't great. Zillow and Realtor are pretty reliable ways to keep busy.

Facebook and Google also have a knack for changing their algorithm and rejecting ads for one reason or another. Way less learning curve and fewer problems when I avoid them.

My last ad on Google got rejected for being "too good to be true" and I put a ton of work into shooting, editing, and creating the ad.

nycdude2022 · 8mo ago

When you did Facebook ads did you setup a pixel? Did you setup Conversions API? Did you have Google Tag Manager? These are crucial for performance. They also allow you to stay optimized with updates to algo and the AI tech. As far as getting rejected on Google you need to err with caution as to the type of offer/claims made especially considering FTC compliance. That should be done before spending the hard work filming and creating the ad. Simply just use chatGPT to critique your stuff for you. Good luck!

Realtor

That's also the problem. You can't expect every realtor to also be an expert in all of those items. The cost per close on Facebook vs Zillow ads are really similar. May as well go the braindead easy route. Especially when giving advice.

Join a brokerage or team that provides leads and teaches you how to find them. Let me know if you need one in your area!

1 · Award · Share

nycdude2022 · 8mo ago

Can be good but just consider to how many agents the same leads are going to. So many brokerages give leads to keep their agents salivating for business but many times those leads have been hit up so many times that they lose trust and willingness.

1 · Award · Share

MN_RealEstateGirl · 8mo ago

Oh definitely not talking about a database of stale leads. I mean real time leads like Zillow flex, Redfin, buyers actively requesting showings

2 · Award · Share

nycdude2022 · 8mo ago

Wonder how much they charge for that and their splits. Rather put that money towards my own marketing and feeding my pixel to generate leads.

Specific-Sun-9074 · 8mo ago

Honestly, when you're brand new, there isn't one "best" way it's more about being consistent with a couple things that work for you. Start with your own circle (friends, family, people you know), because your first few deals usually come from folks who already trust you. Open houses are another easy way to meet buyers face-to-face.

And no matter how you get leads, the follow-up is what makes or breaks it. Even a simple system to remind you to check in can keep you from losing people who are interested but not ready right away. Stick with it and the momentum builds.

Depends on how aggressive you want to be in your efforts.

This is the first one, many won't agree with, but it's simply suggestion.

Working with renters/rental tenants:

You won't charge your side of commission (meaning you're only taking what the leasing side is paying). You're going to treat them like a million dollar buyer and add them to your database. You're not waiting for them to turn into a buyer. You want them as a referral, and you want them to leave you a GLOWING online review. This method is for playing the long game.

Next, you're going to AGGRESSIVELY appear at multiple open houses in one weekend.

You're going to do 2 on Saturday and 2 on Sunday.

Although you're new, buy a couple of sign riders that you will ask the agent(s) if you can place them on the sign of the home the morning of (or the evening before) the open house. Your sign riders should have all of your info like normal, but you're going to get a QR code on them (which you can always change the info it leads to). The QR code is going to lead to an info flyer about the home, which most people will want, but you will also attach a lead capture form for them to fill out of they want to be contacted.

You're going to do one open from 12-2, then the next from 3-5, each day. You're going to hit 4 DIFFERENT properties in one weekend. Do this for a couple of months. You will have different price points to research and learn about this way as well.

Make sure you're not sitting reading a book, but you're there waiting to give info about the sales activity around the listing over the last 45-60 days. Be armed with the information.

...good luck

Set up Google LSA, Meta Ads, and use an Open House Sign Up Tool. If you have a CRM, set it up with your own built automations with emails and SMS. Make sure they are made by you from scratch or from chatGPT and not given to you as a template. Templates mean that chances are many people are using the same thing. Imagine a lead getting contacted by multiple agents running the same email/SMS templated messaging.

Image ads have been crushing lately vs video ads. Use Google Gemini over chat gpt to create scroll-stopping ads.

Have a QR code at open houses to get people to scan and get onto a landing page that educates them about the property and yourself. Can even add a 1-2 min video about yourself and the property. People will find this unique and it allows you to share information concisely with the highest impact.

Speed to lead is applicable. Any time a lead is generated via your ads and marketing get on then ASAP. Within 30mins if possible.

Be a doctor. Ask lots of questions and really understand people's situation and painpoints to be truly of value/help. Just like a doctor diagnoses you after going in depth about your situation you should do the same.
